Magic Limited Edition Collection

Magic Arcana
 Thursday, August 25, 2005

We mentioned last week that collectors and connoisseurs of fantasy art would be able to own full-size, high-quality Magic art as part of the Limited Edition Collection.

We know you have questions. Today in Magic Arcana we provide are more details about the Limited Edition Collection, and let you know two of the five Magic: The Gathering pieces that will be available.

Also, be sure to check out today's Into the Aether to find out how to win selections from the Limited Edition Collection.

Canvas vs. Prints?

The canvas versions are meant for the collector and true Magic enthusiast. Produced only in small quantities, they come in a black wood frame on high-quality canvas. For those on more of a budget, the prints come with a museum-quality grey matte and will be available in higher quantities. Both versions come with a certificate of authenticity.

Are They Signed?

Both the canvas and print pieces are hand-signed and hand-numbered by the individual artists.

Are They Unique?

These pieces are guaranteed not to be produced again in this manner. They will become available for online order through wizards.com in the coming months; we'll let you know on magicthegathering.com when you can make your order. And once they're gone, they're gone.

Will There Be D&D Art Too?

Watch the D&D site for details on what Dungeons & Dragons art will be available.

More Information?

Watch magicthegathering.com for more information on the Limited Edition Collection. We'll let you in on the print technology used to create them, describe the UV protective coating and professional-quality mattes and framing, and of course show you what other pieces of your favorite Magic art will be available.
